WHY PIPELINE WAS STOPPED

Work on the pipeline, being put in to connect up the oil tanks with the electric light plant, came to an end some little time ago, without the line commencing from anywhere. The reason there is nothing further doing and no oil gurgles its way underground through the runway is because when the pipeline reached the turn off Queen street to the railroad wharf they found themselves up against it.

A strip of land, commonly used as a street but claimed by a private corporation as its own right of way to dispose of as it sees fit, is the bone of contention between the projectors of the pipeline laid along Queen, Fort and Allen streets, and the Oahu Railroad company. Except for the crossing of this strip of land, which is the key to the situation, the pipeline could now be connected up with the present delivery vent, and the oil could be drawn at the town end of the pipe, at the Hawaiian Electric Company's powerhouse on Alakea and Haleakalua streets.

Several weeks ago the pipeline was laid by contractor Belser. Then came the hitch, for the projectors of the line found that the crossing of the strip of land was to be contested.

There are several interesting angles to the proposed long delivery of fuel oil. First of all the Union Oil Company, for which the Dillingham Co. are agents, and the Pacific Oil & Transportation Company, for which Captain Miller is agent, are under contract to discharge their oil cargoes arriving from the California coast at the railroad wharves. Both companies have erected nests of receiving oil tanks on lands leased from the railroad company.

The use of oil as fuel has become widespread and among the users are the Hawaiian Electric Company, the Rapid Transit Company, Alexander Young and Moana Hotel companies, the Oceanic Steamship Company and the Matson boats. The location of the oil tanks at Iwilei necessitates long hauls of oil by tank wagons to the Hawaiian Electric Company works and the hotels. The Rapid Transit transports oil from a delivery vent located at the Ewa end of the Queen street bridge across the Nuanu stream by its street railway route to the powerhouse in a specially constructed tank car. To obviate these long and constant hauls, the Hawaiian Electric Company contracted for and had built a pipeline which passed along Queen street to Fort, thence down Fort to a street connected with the electric works. It was also proposed to tap the line opposite the Inter-Island wharves.

On the last day that Mr. Holloway was Superintendent of Public Works, permission was granted the Electric Light company by him to lay its pipeline on the aforementioned streets, without consideration. The Hawaiian Electric Company contracts for its oil from the Pacific Oil & Transportation Company, a rival to the Union Oil Company, the latter company being controlled by the Dillingham company which brings it closely in connection with the railroad interests, who own the railway wharves at which all oil is discharged from cargo steamers for both oil companies.

The railway company has refused permission for the pipeline to cross their alleged private right of way, and there the matter has stood for some time, neither side being able to come to an agreement.

Superintendent of Public Works Campbell has confirmed the permission given to the Hawaiian Electric Company to run its pipeline under the streets, and believes that in this way the government wharves will be benefited by increased wharfage fees. If branches are run to these wharves, the large steamers using oil may have their tanks refilled while lying at their own wharves where the cargo is being discharged, otherwise they must make a trip across the harbor to connect with the pipelines at the railroad wharves and going there in the first place in preference to an oilless government wharf. It is argued that if branch lines connect with the Inter-Island wharves, the Matson wharf, the Oceanic wharf, the new Alakea and Kilauwa wharves, that increased revenue will accrue to the government, but at a loss to the railroad company in wharfage.

This argument is advanced against the counter statement that the government has given away a valuable street franchise to gain which there should have been a consideration of value.

It is understood that the pipeline system would not extend beyond the electric works, for the Rapid Transit looks upon such a proposition as too expensive, being satisfied with the present method of transporting the bulk by rail.

Both Mr. McCandless and Manager Gentry of the Hawaiian Electric Company stated last week that the matter was about to be settled.
